

Japanese Perfin User Identifications

Paul Mistretta (LM#111)

Last month I published an updated version of Sunao Adachi's translation of his wording in the Catalog of Japanese perfins. This very slightly revised version of his work came about because when I tried to read the typed?mimeographed version I found myself going crosseyed due to what appears to be ink migration and speckling common to mimeo products. In addition to the descriptive materials translated by Mr. Adachi, the material I had included a photocopy from Floyd Walker's files which was Adachi's listing of Japanese perfin users. The list was as difficult to read as the text materials. In addition, it was annotated with quite a few handwritten new user identifications.

The initial list by Mr. Adachi was published sometime after 1980, and the annotations were added at some unknown time since. Despite the annotation there were still many unidentified patterns and given 25 years I felt there might be more information out there not available when this list was first published. A list of the approximately 200 patterns with unidentified users has turned up no new identifications. (It did however result in scans of several beautiful patterns from Ron Wythe).

While working through the process of cleaning up the list, I did change the formatting slightly. Where multiple companies were known to use a pattern Adachi had simply separated them by a semicolon or comas but there was little consistency. And, the semicolon was almost as frequently used to separate the name of the company from the city-of-use as was the coma. In this version comas go between the business name and the cities of use and semicolons go between businesses using the same patterns, which are presented on separate lines.

For the purposes of further clarity any handwritten ID has been entered in the appropriate location in the list, but within square brackets.

I also found a couple of questions that I could not answer, and welcome all help in understanding what is meant.

1. First, the use of "Traffics" in many IDs does not tell me what I need to know. Is this a Department of Transportation office controlling vehicle or train traffic or is it a translation for a character indicating something like "Trading Co."
2. I find the use of "Office" in the singular with more than one city name to be ambiguous in its meaning. As an example – pattern S33 lists a singular use of "Office" and two city names. Does that mean that there are two offices, one in each city, or that the user is the Osaka Office of the Ka Soap Co. of Tokyo?
3. What is the transliteration for the phrase "Muchmost holes type" used after pattern H54
4. And, after pattern H55 is found "Top many letters pattern". [I believe that this is a typo for "Too many..."] But, while Mr. Adachi presented lots of information concerning the registration of patterns at the local post office, and paying fees for their use, I have been unable to find in his catalog information any restrictions on the size of patterns or the number of characters allowable. Hence my question – what is "Too many..."?

And with that said, below is presented the updated listing of Users of Japanese perfin patterns.
